Denise Wolf is an Organizational Dynamics Consultant with SIGMA. She has worked with a variety of companies in a number of industries, ranging from high-tech to multi-unit retail and distribution. Her experience includes leadership positions with Microsoft, AT&T Wireless, Starbucks, and Vulcan Inc. Her broad experience in different aspects of business gives her the ability to identify big picture issues and to work with various levels of the organizations to solve them. She helps organizations identify their vision, develop clear goals to achieve defined objectives, and establish systems that foster open communication and the exchange of ideas. Denise also provides expertise to assimilate information from various groups to assist clients in adjusting actions to meet the evolving needs of both the internal and external environments.

Denise has also worked with several companies during their high growth phases. She has helped shift informal environments to ones that required systems and structure to support anticipated growth. She has also been a part of training and implementing new programs. She has helped teams work through the challenges of effectuation and buy-in. When she joined Vulcan Inc., the company was moving from a predominately informal environment to one that required systems and structure to support anticipated growth. Denise was instrumental in helping to building the foundation based on identified values. She transitioned from an individual contributor who worked solely with the leadership team to one who managed Systems and Physical Security, Operations and Facilities, European Properties, Yachts and Human Resources. Denise met on site with her managers to ensure she understood the business challenges and requirements in order to accurately budget, manage performance and confirm appropriate security measures were in place.

Denise has a B.A. in Mass Communications and Psychology, and an M.A. in Psychology. She is trained in mediation, detecting deception and corporate investigations.
